Rock Salt Lamps

Rock salt was almost first mined around 300 BC from the Khewra Salt Mine in modern-day Pakistan, one of the world's oldest and largest salt mines. Ancient Ayurvedic texts mention the therapeutic properties of salt, particularly its role in purifying the air and promoting healing. The concept of using salt as a lamp is thought to have evolved from ancient civilizations, where natural elements like fire and earth were revered for their healing energies. Over time, artisans began crafting lamps from large salt crystals, recognizing their soothing glow and believed benefits of ionizing the air and creating a calming environment.

Today salt is important for us as air and water, serving our needs in domestic as well as commercial purposes. Research and experience have proven the therapeutic benefits of this rock salt, especially if glows with certain heat from within that results in the discharge of negative ions into the atmosphere that balances out the positive ions. Positive ions deteriorate the quality of air we breathe. Negative ions emitting from rock salt lamps freshen the atmosphere and improves air quality by removing harmful +vely charged particles from air, thus serving as natural air purifiers.

Salt crystals, thanks to its composition is an ideal source of negative ions
